¹ Your deposits are protected by a statutory deposit guarantee scheme. In case of insolvency of your bank your deposits will be refunded up to 100,000EUR by the deposit guarantee scheme.

² In case your deposits should not be available due to the bank's inability to meet its financial obligations, depositors are compensated by the deposit guarantee scheme. The respective maximum amount covered is limited to 100,000 EUR per bank. The covered amount is determined by adding up all deposits that are held within the same bank. E.g. if a person holds 90,000 EUR in a savings account and 20,000 EUR with a current account, the total amount compensated is limited to the maximum limit of 100,000 EUR.

The deposit guarantee scheme will compensate your deposits up to the maximum limit of 100,000 EUR within seven working days. In case you should not have received the compensation payable to you in due course, we advise you to contact the deposit guarantee scheme as the validity period for the compensation payable may expire. For further information please see <http://www.edb-banken.de/>. Further important notice: in general, deposits held by private customers and companies are protected by the deposit guarantee scheme. However, there are specific deposits that are exempt from protection. Details as to these are given on the website of the respective deposit guarantee scheme. Upon request, your bank will provide information on whether specific products are within the scope of protection. If deposits are protected, your bank will confirm accordingly on your bank statements.
